Y.S.R. DISTRICT,

Description of organization (history, mission, focus):*History:

It began with a single child year 1992. We found a 3-year old girl child abandoned in the streets of Kadapa. When we enquired about her whereabouts, we were told that her mother was killed by her father and she had nowhere to go. Instead of abandoning her again on the streets, we decided to provide her shelter.

To our delight, we found that many were willing to come forward and support her. To our horror, we found that there were many more abandoned girls like her. Aarti has grown over the last 20 years from a home with 4-5 girl children, to a shelter for 100 children, to a school for 250 children, to livelihood and awareness programs. Vijay Foundation Trust is now an umbrella organisation which plans and implements programs that address the larger issues hampering the progress of women in society.

While it is a matter of pride for us that we have been able to help abandoned girl children, it is also a matter of shame that we as a society continue to abandon girl children. And changing that we know is a journey of thousand miles. A journey we have just begun to walk.

Mission:

At Aarti, we believe in the ultimate empowerment – for a woman to be able to write her own story. We realize that gender equality is beyond just the survival of a girl child or for that matter, economic independence of women. It is only when women have the power to make choices for themselves and for their children can we consider them to be liberated.

→Core Purpose: Aarti exists to ensure that women survive and are empowered to exercise choices over their lives.

Programs:

Shelter and Schooling: It is not possible to recreate a lost home for a child. What we try however is to provide the kind of care and opportunities that every child has a right to expect from its parents – to be there through the storms of life. This has meant going beyond shelter and schooling, to get the children admitted in the right college or finding life partners for them. The commitment does not end with someone stepping out of Aarti's premises and into the world. Even after someone gets a job and is married, they still need a home to return to.

Empower Women: Aarti Livelihood programs address this issue. Till date, about 5000 women have been trained in various forms of income-generating skills such as Fashion Design and Tailoring, Beautician Training, Hand and Machine Embroidery, Handicraft Training including toy-making and Block Printing. Lalita Cooperative is a registered charity and was established to provide marketing support to women so that they could be economically independent.

Raise Awareness: Most issues surrounding gender equality are a result of ignorance, of laws, of rights, of what is the right way of being. As we move into the third decade of our work, we see awareness as the key driver of change – for if we can positively impact the way men think about women and women think about themselves, we can bring about lasting change. We provide knowledge and information to fight these issues through awareness camps for health and legal rights, campaigns against eve-teasing and domestic violence, family counselling and campaigns against dowry. We also believe that the future lies in what the next generation holds as its value system and hence conduct numerous programs in schools and colleges to educate them regarding gender discrimination issues. We have had heartening results in terms of not just making girls realise their worth but also in sensitising boys.
